Similarly, the Court held that a union could not waive its members' section 1983 claims by failing to state a section 1983 claim in its own name. Id. at 655-56. The Court reasoned that "[a] union that has sued in its own name to vindicate the statutory rights of its members is in no different position than any private plaintiff suing to vindicate those rights." Id. at 656. The Court thus held that section 1367(d)'s 90-day limitations period does not apply to an action brought by a union to vindicate its members' section 1983 claims. Id. at 657. In this case, the union did not seek to vindicate the statutory rights of its members in the courts. It instead sought a common law remedy for its members' section 1983 claim, just as in Rivera. Therefore, the fact that the union sued for the alleged violations of its members' statutory rights is not dispositive as to the applicability of section 1367(d)'s 90-day period. The union's argument that it is not a public entity is similarly misplaced. We have repeatedly stated that in determining the applicability of a public entity's sovereign immunity, "we must look to the nature of the entity as determined by state law." Price v. City of Charlotte, 126 F.3d 576, 582 (4th Cir.1997); see also Kovacevich v. Kent State Univ., 224 F.3d 806, 828 (6th Cir.2000) (same). Therefore, we are guided by the provisions of Title 9.1 of the West Virginia Code in determining whether the union is immune from suit. Section 9-1-15 states that "[t]he following provisions shall apply to all government entities, and to any individual who is empowered by this article:... (c) A governmental entity and an individual employed by a governmental entity shall not be liable for any civil damages as a result of the acts or omissions of such
